In a significant development in Nigerian football, William Troost-Ekong has officially signed with Saudi Arabian club Al-Ittihad. The move marks a new chapter in the 30-year-old defender's career, as he departs from Serie A side Udinese, where he has been a key player.

Troost-Ekong, a stalwart of Nigeria's national team and renowned for his defensive prowess, will now bring his experience to the Saudi Pro League. The transfer, reportedly valued at around €5 million, highlights the growing trend of established European players moving to the Middle East for both competitive and financial incentives.

Al-Ittihad, one of Saudi Arabia's top clubs, is looking to strengthen its squad with Troost-Ekong's addition, aiming for a successful season in both domestic and international competitions. This move also underscores the increasing appeal of the Saudi league, which continues to attract high-profile talent. Fans are eagerly awaiting to see how Troost-Ekong will impact his new team and the league overall.
